Overall Course Purpose: To provide the health care professional with an overview of the discipline of Clinical Informatics that when combined with evidenced based practice is improving the delivery of healthcare and opportunities for the future. The topic of leadership will also be explored with emphasis placed on situational approaches to leadership and its application to nursing leadership.

Objectives:

- Define clinical informatics and the role of technology in supporting healthcare delivery.
- Describe the role of nursing in the field of clinical informatics
- Identify opportunities to increase nurses' involvement in technology decisions at their organization.
- Differentiate among the trait, behavioral and situational approaches to leadership and its application to nursing leadership.
- Describe the 4 styles and developmental levels in the situational leadership model as developed by Ken Blanchard.
- Describe the characteristics associated with each situational leadership style.
- Define the two factors which can affect an individual's ability to accomplish a goal or complete a task.
- Describe ways in which the nurse leader can match leadership style to developmental style.
- Define the strengths and weaknesses of the situational approach to leadership.
